Five royal sutras are traditionally said to have been translated on Padmasambhava's recommendation and used for daily practice by the Tibetan king Trisong Detsen. Their use is said to have contributed to the king's life being prolonged by thirteen years beyond the limit predicted by astrological reckoning.

Five royal sutras consists of:

1. The King of Aspiration Prayers
2. Vajra Conqueror
3. Heart Sutra
4. Sutra on Wisdom at the Hour of Death
5. The Confession of Downfalls (Confessions to 35 Buddhas)

In the retreat, all of the above sutras will be recited . In addition, we will accumulate 400,000 recitations of Heart Sutra .

Karmapa's explanation on Five royal sutras

My personal understanding is that the term 'royal' can be understood as referring to you, yourself. After all, you are the centre of the universe. You are your own master.

'Sutra' is often translated into English as 'discourse'. I suppose that interpretation has its place, but I think that a more accurate way of describing the Sanskrit word Sutra (in Tibetan མདོ - mdo – Do) would be 'summary'. How many different words should there be to describe a particular word? Or how many colours are needed to describe a colour? It's the same dilemma. So, the awakened ones used the most common words or terminology available at the time to suggest the idea of a 'summary' – something like 'in short', to use a more colloquial expression.

These Sutras can be described as unfathomable wisdom methods of the Buddhas. They were originally given by Buddha Shakyamuni in the form of spoken words, and we are fortunate that they are still available in written form today. These sutras are vehicles – if you think of yourself as depending on something to move forward. They are paths – if you think of yourself as the vehicle.

These Five Royal Sutras represent the paths of

1. Aspiration
 2. Cleansing
 3. View
 4. Meditation
 5. Confession
